JEFF GREATEST CHAMPION OF HEAVYWEIGHTS EVER KNOWN TO PRIZE RING

Jim Stood So Far Ahead of All the Rest That the Whole World Recognized Him as Supreme-Reasons That Account for His Defeat at Reno.

HERE have been many great heavyweight champions, but only one who stood so far ahead of the rest that the whole world recognized him as the greatest of them all long period of hard work and all abstinence from all luxuries in dissipations renewed the physical powers. He looked as peed as ever. He worked as well. I doubt that anyone would have thought of disputing this fact before the fateful defeat at Reno. But that defeat should not sway one's judgment in summing up the fighting qualities of the great Jeffries.

For one of two reasons the Jeffries who lumbered heavily into the ring at Reno was not the Jeffries who used to leap through the ropes, keeneyed, cool, smiling, determined, and thrilling in every fibre with nerve force that was nothing short of phenomenal in such a giant of a man.

The first reason, which might be sufficient in itself to account for any fighter's defeat, is that Jeffries had not fought in elz years and during that time had lived a life of case and had taken on one hundred is of added weight. This hundred pounds be trained off in ten mouths.

to pick a fight. He never liked fighting among sparring partners, and be lost cause he was a giant in sme and when it comes to the real test in the strength and he knew that he could win when it comes to the real test in the ring—lost simply because he has grown out of the fighting habit.

The eccond possible reason why Jefries at Reno was not the Jeffries of the cold days is furnished by the claim that he was drugged. I believe that claim is true. Jeffries hired one of the greatest Jeff, he was bitten on the leg by a detective agencies in the world to run small bear. Jeff let the leg awell for a few days, then suddenly appropried to down the facts. The details gathered few days, then suddenly announced that up a complete story of the most the fight must be postponed. His man-
